It is the primary animal handling and animal care company in Australia. The company is primarily concerned with the welfare of laboratory animals, both domestic and exotic. The company's foremost objective is to provide high-quality animal care services to all manner of research facilities throughout the Asia-Pacific region. The Elliot Group is run on a not-for-profit basis and is a part of the Sydney University's Division of Animal Science. History Elliot Group was founded in Sydney in 1886 by William Elliot, a British chemist who came to Australia as a convict with a portable laboratory, and who set up as a chemist. Elliot became one of Australia's leading industrial chemists in the years following World War I and, as a result, was keen to bring his experience of working with animals to the Sydney University. Following World War II, the Elliot Group was the first animal-handling company in Australia to be awarded a licence by the National Health and Medical Research Council to export laboratory animals and research-grade materials. This led to the establishment of the Elliot Group's animal-handling division in 1951. Elliot Group's animal care division continued to operate with the establishment of a laboratory animal centre in the Sydney University's Sydney School of Veterinary Science
