Screenshots Customer Reviews What a shame! by cdfurton This is a very gorgeous game. The combination of plants, colors, and music is flawless. However, the game is absolutely unplayable due to its chronic tendency to crash every time you run it. This problem doesn't seem to be isolated to certain devices (even I have bad luck), and hasn't gotten any better since the last update. It's a shame because this game is gorgeous, has great potential, and has good gameplay. If only there was a fix that would help it become playable. Please fix it. Lovely, lovely game! by Todinho I just finished it today. It's enjoyable and cute. Thanks! Amazing by Cacaofaeru What can I say? This is a very fun game. The music, the animations, the controls are all great. And playing the game helps you grow plants. I can

After thinking long and hard, we have decided to remove it. We feel that such a big project as InFlux shouldn't be contained on the home page of a static website. There are heaps of film related things on our web site that a visitor would be interested in. Additionally, the first version of the film itself was presented at a obscure event on a dark laneway in London. We don't want to compete with it.The second version of the film is a 'finished' piece, it has a clearly articulated universe and tone. As for the process of making the second version, we feel that the 'first version' would never offer it up to a public eye. There isn't a level of attention to detail that you could ever see in an amateur clip of the photographer taking photos of flowers for example. If you're going to put something else on a website, go all out with it. Our effort to demonstrate a very basic version of the universe InFlux is so clearly propagating is missing the point
